George Karam Gannam; Gannam family

Biographical History:

George Karam Gannam (1919-1941) was born on October 24, 1919 in Manchester, New Hampshire to Annie Abraham Gannam (1884-1943) and Karam Gannam (1882-1980). He was the second youngest of five children born to the couple. Annie and Karam Gannam came to the United States from Lebanon and were married in Manchester, New Hampshire. After World War I, the family migrated south, settling in Savannah, Georgia. On 53rd and Hopkins streets, in Savannah, the family had a home and started a grocery store next door, in which they sold various items, including produce from their garden. The family attended the local Sacred Heart Catholic Church. George and his siblings helped run the store after school and on the weekends.

George Gannam graduated from Benedictine Military School, a local private Catholic high school in 1938. Gannam was active in reestablishing his high school's newspaper, "The Campus Quill," and served as its' editor his senior year. In school, George took classes in German and military training. Gannam was also an avid amateur photographer.

After graduating, Gannam signed up for the United States Army Air Corps in August of 1939. The main reason he signed up was to save money to attend college. He was first stationed at Fort Moultrie, South Carolina and soon received orders to transfer to Wheeler Field, Hawaii with the 17th Squadron, 18th Air Base Group. Gannam climbed through military ranks and received specialized training while stationed in Hawaii. In 1940, Gannam received a diploma in Communications, and was certified as a control tower operator. In 1941, Gannam was promoted from Private First Class to Corporal, then to Sergeant and finally to Staff Sergeant. He also received his radio operator's license in 1941. Gannam qualified as an Army Aviation Cadet and was scheduled to depart for training just before the attacks on the Hawaiian Islands in 1941.

At the young age of 22, George Gannam was killed in action on December 7, 1941 during the Pearl Harbor attacks carried out by the Japanese. During the attacks, Gannam was trying to save airplanes from the Japanese bombs. He was the only one to die from his squadron and was the first World War II casualty from Savannah, Georgia.

Many local Savannah newspapers, regional and local Catholic publications, Syrian-American publications, national magazines (such as Life), and even a CBS radio broadcast retold the story of George Gannam's death in Hawaii. The family held a requiem mass at Sacred Heart Catholic Church because Gannam's body was buried in Hawaii at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific. Gannam's body is still in this cemetery, but a memorial grave marker is located in Bonaventure Cemetery in Savannah. A flag ceremony was held for Gannam in his honor on February 22, 1942, in which Benedictine Military Academy Cadets and family members raised George's flag on a pole, adjacent to the Gannam home. On the first anniversary of his death, Gannam was honored with a photograph montage that was hung in Savannah's City Hall in Mayor Thomas Gamble's office. On March 19, 1943 George was posthumously honored with a Purple Heart for his sacrifice. Every year on Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day the Benedictine Military School honors George, other fallen alumni, and World War II veterans on George Gannam Day. The local American Legion Post 184 was named in honor of George, and the Post awards two Benedictine cadets for excellence in the name of George Gannam every year.

Scope & Content:

The George Karam Gannam papers (1917-1950, no date) includes correspondence, photographs, a scrapbook and a variety of objects (including over fifty artifacts) documenting the life of George K. Gannam. Some of the artifacts include headphones, a baseball glove, baseball, a box camera, uniform pins, and two American flags. George and his family collected over 150 photographs that span George's life in Savannah with friends and family, pictures of other soldiers in Hawaii, his time traveling on ships, and memorials after his death in Savannah. The collection includes published educational and religious books, as well as volumes of the Benedictine Military School newspaper, issues of a United States transport ship newspaper, the Syrian Ark magazine, and an issue of Life Magazine. Some of the materials document his educational experience, including notebooks, handwritten notes, and assignments. There is correspondence to and from Gannam, military officials, and Gannam's family. Personal documents include Gannam's Catholic Identification card, financial notebooks with his monthly and daily spending record, address books, military certificates, diplomas and operating license. Gannam travelled throughout his military life, and documents from his travels include postcards, a travel guidebook, souvenir stickers, and travel brochures. Highlights of the collection are the varied content in the photographs, the last recorded purchase Gannam wrote in his financial notebook made only two days before his death, personal artifacts owned by Gannam, and a dictionary wrapped in local Savannah newspaper.

System of Arrangement & Ordering:

The George Karam Gannam papers (1917-1950, no date) is arranged thematically, chronologically and by format. Photographs are arranged by known dates and negatives are arranged by their corresponding prints (if there is one available they are labeled with individual item numbers). Not all photographs have negatives and not all negatives have photograph prints. Some of the negatives' corresponding prints are glued into the family scrapbook. Boxes 1121-062-03 through 1121-062-05 are arranged thematically and then chronologically, including Gannam's: educational documents; military documents; personal documents; travel documents; religious documents; and the Gannam family's collection of documents after Gannam's death. The family scrapbook is housed in an oversized box and a digitized copy is available to facilitate researcher access. The artifacts are arranged by size and format.
